CATI Programmer: The response categories above indicate that county FIPS codes should be put on the data file to indicate county of residence. If respondents know the county that they live in, they will, of course, respond with the name of the county. There are a variety of ways that the county FIPS code can be determined. If a state has no more than 10-12 counties, the interviewer may be able to enter the FIPS code from a list of county names and FIPS codes that appears on the screen for this question. If a state has too many counties to make this work well, it is best to have the interviewer just enter whatever the respondent says. Then, at the end of the survey, display the text typed and have the interviewer look up (on a paper list) the name and enter the appropriate number. Asking the interviewer to enter a code from a list while the respondent is on the phone can cause the respondent to break off the interview if the interviewer takes too long or the interviewer to commit an error if the interviewer hurry too much.
